Weather Bureau data. Variable diathermancy or cloudiness, evaporation or cloud formation, south or north winds are the main factors that cause variations from the normal. In short, cyclonic storms or rain cause the departures. Applying these equations and then checking on the actual temperature experienced, the differences were from 1 to about 15 degrees with a mean de 1 Abstract of a paper presented at the Pasadena meeting of the American Physical Society, June 19, 1919. parture of about 7 degrees. The chances in the arid West are one in six that the departure will be less than 2 degrees, two in five that it will be as much as 5 degrees, one in four that it will be as much as io degrees and one in seven that it will be 15 degrees. Very rarely is it more than 15 degrees. The probable temperature can be determined by modifying the normal temperature as determined above after consultation with the Weather Bureau as to whether the day in question is to be warmer or colder (as determined from their weather maps) than usual. By long time averages, normals for climates not as dry as here in the West can be obtained, but rains and variable cloudiness cause rather wide departures from these normals. The above method would give a suggestion of what might be expected even in these places. Physics Department, Utah Agricultural College, Logan, Utah, June...
