Another valuable result, flowing from the same source, is the adaptation of our knowledge of the healthy functions to the general management of disease Here also there is no antagonism between the new school and ourselves, since their discoveries in the field of applied physiology contradict none of our conclusions, and are as useful to us in practice as they can be to themselves. On the fourth question, the writer says: -- The more we consider this point the more convinced we become that the future of homoeopathy and the future of the new school are indissolubly bound together The first effect of the new school is to stir us up to fresh exertions. Other doctors besides ourselves have now learned to do no harm, and hence mere negative advantages will no longer count. We must show a positive superiority of results, or we shall certainly go to the wall It will also bring to the test the assertions of the rigid symptom-hunters, who would have us discard everything except the collecting and comparing of symptoms Had we no other objections to strict high-potency practice, we should be loth to adopt it because it would cut us off from many of the useful suggestions of the physiologists. Interpreting the system of homoeopathy to be the practical application of specific drugs to the treatment of disease, and nothing else, we Physicians practising Homoeopathy are in the best possible position for adopting every really useful..
