CHAPTER XIII It was a sad little group of three who stood at the Bondurante gate watching the back of the carriage that carried the lovely little mistress of the manse away from them. Uncle Tom leaned heavily on his walkingcane, and only grunted his objections to the whole proceeding; while Clarisse, poor old soul, paying no heed to the great tears that coursed adown her fat cheeks, kept wiping her hands on her apron over and over again. Somehow, although she had heard absolutely nothing, she connected Babette s going away to teach with her own confession, and she blamed herself. If any one else, under the circumstances, had been betrayed into giving this testimony, even in the presence of death, she would have denounced her as unworthy the trust. And so now she denounced herself. This was why, instead of weeping...
